

A Canadian study gave $7,500 to homeless people. Here's how they spent it.

A Canadian study demonstrate that cash transfers to reduce homeless. In this experiment they gave them money and the homeless paid with money rent, food, and clothes, but they don't spend in drugs, alcohol or tabaco like people to predict. On the other hand, it is a good form to reducing crime because homeless said that when received a cash transfer, they felt like a vote of confidence.

Canada warning over US travel comes at 'concerning time', LGBTQ+ groups say.

The growing wave of anti-LGBTQ+ sentiment as well violence across the US is becoming increasingly alarming to many Canadian civil liberties and LGBTQ+ rights organizations, they say that if doesn't necessary to go to USA, go somewhere else because it's really dangerous for members of LGBTQ+. This is a preoccupation because are being introduced in Canada similar policies and legislations of USA. In consequence, crimes targeting LGBTQ+ increased in some regions of Canada.
